From the apparent impossibility of coming to any definite understanding on the subject it spans likely that the committee aumointed to defally the Morrison Scholarship for sion of the Andlence, which is interesting, as resort to Equity to settle the difficulty which has arisen between them. It will be a matter of much regret should this line of action have to be adopted, as the most probable ing article on the subject, but it conclusively result from it would be that something like proves the correctness of the position which $2,500, would go in legal expenses, and but a poor residue be left of the donation which has been made. It may be well, therefore before matters have been pushed to this extreme, to examine what are the actual merits of the case, looked at, so far as a nonlegal mind can judge, in something of the Same light as it would appear in, in an Equity Court.

General Pavia has militarily dissolved the Corles, •So far as we can pretend to pronounce an opinion on the subject, it appears to us that before an Equity Court would undertake to go behind the resolution as it stands it would take into consideration whether the terms were in any way ambiguous. If not, the Court would be bound to decree upon them according to the ordinary rules for the construction of documents, that is, to take the words in their most simple sense. If, however, it was thought by the Court that there was any ambiguity, it could then receive evidence to explain the actual intention of the framers of the resolution. The only point on which there might be thought steamer left, at 2 p.m. on the 5th instant. to be any such ambiguity is as to the ineaning of the word "conditions," that is, as to whether this word meant conditions as to the investment of the money and the like details, or conditions such as the Reverend the steamen to try to sell it, thinking be might Trustees now seek to attach to the grant for find friends there who would purchase it. good bridges along the river, now told us that we were nearing the end of our journey. The minarcts of Leming-foo, the large town opposite, on the small River to Changking, then appeared in view; we then skirted a suburb on the south of the Yangtsze, and a little time afterwards had crossed the Biver to one of the wide stone jettics, crowded with carriers and people, ascending to the gate above. There is little room for suburbs outside, and all business and storage is done inside the walls, which skirt round the wandering edges of abrupt cliffs. A servant from the Bishop of Sinite waited upon us with cards, and a lot of police runners took barge of us in our passage through long lines of well paved streets. In a quarter of an bour we slighted at the domicile propared for us, which, surrounded by four high fire walls and lighted only by three air wells above, offectually imprisoned us from the noise and busy life around. The city is a very large thriving one; and compares well in cleanliness and the bustle of its streets with any in China, while the fleets of junks unchored along the banks of the two Rivers accounted for the large traffic of the River below. We visited the next day some of the large guild temples in the city, and walls commanded a good view of the two cities and two Rivers and the suburbs on the south capped by the never failing Pagoda. We spent many pleasant days visiting a lot of the bone volent societies, which, as an attraction to subscribers, combine with the dispensation of clothes, rice, medicine, coffins, &c., pleasure gardens rejoicing in flowers, pavilions, fish pouds. and theatrical stages. At one which we subsequently visited, about five miles outside the city. we were much interested in a bard piece of limestone, found last year in a quarry on the hill, and bearing the natural and complete half impression of a large fish, the deep scales of which reminded one of the Ganoidians with their thick bone terminal scales, read of in books of the Old Red Sandstone period. One day was spent pleasantly in a trip along the Cheng-too high road as far as the fortification of Fung-too Quan. The commencement of our journey led us through different cometeries for the poor, soldiers, Mahomedans and Roman Catholies. Thence the road led along the narrow ridge of a high rock which separates the two rivers, each flowing down lazily so close together as to encompass the isthmus that we had just come off and to unite below. The fortification is build round the top of a cliff-like formation, and commanding so effectually the read ascending the cliff to pass through it, merits well the saying that Chungking is safe as long as Fungtoo holds out-if, of course, no such thing us effective gunboats existed. We looked down on the country around, composed of one mass of hills, all, however, cultivated to the top, and traced the stone Changtoo road winding along amongst them. One and twenty years ago, however, the state of things was already so changed that the Prince President, a few weeks before his assumption of the Imperial Crown, was able to perform a dignified act of grace without any practical risk, by decreeing the release of the once dreaded Emir. Since that time Abd-el-Kader has lived a retired and peaceful life in his Enstern exity. During his later years Abd-el-Kader enjoyed a considerable pension from the French Government, and his sympathies were understood to have turned altogether aside from his early aspirations for independence. He had, indeed been so thoroughly converted us to fee a keen interest in the fortunes of the nation which had conquered him. When he was received as a guest in Paris he took apparent delight in the society of his conquerors, and he is said to have been deeply moved by the calamities which overtook, three years ago, the dynasty that had given him freedom and princely welcome: The agony of France during 1871 was complicated by an insurrection of the Kabyles, and if this movement had grown more formidable the intervention, on the side of France, of Abd-el-Kader, whose name was still power with his countrymen, would have been probably solicited, and would have been, no doubt, as successful as it would have been cheerfully used. . The history of the French conquest of Algeria s in aubstance the record of the conflict which Abd-el-Kuder waged almost single-handed against the foremost military nation of Europe.

ABD-EL-KADER.

Born of a family celebrated for sanctity, crudtion, and illustrious descent, Abd-el-Kader was bred in all the wisdom of the "Marabouts," and inherited a potent influence, partly political and partly religious, over the hot blooded tribes of his kindred. While he was to travelling trader. yet a child he made the pilgrimage to the City of the Prophet, which gave him a claim to the title of " Hadji." Afterwards be studied all which Arab philosophy reckons to be worth guarding of human wisdom in the schools of Egypt and Morocco, and he had already won a high reputation whom the invasion, of Algiers by the French finally broke the power of the Tarkish Days and the military oligaroby which upheld them. The expulsion of the Dey and his Janissaries was not regretted by the Arab population, whom they had cruelly oppressed; but, unfortunately the soldiers of civilization," as an eminent Franch writer designated Marshal Bourmont's conquering force, wielded "the holy bayonets of France" with very little regard for justice or mercy. The Kubyles and Bolonins were irritated beyond bearing by the esmourge and the multiplied formalties of the contralized system of administration introduced after the Revolution of July. The cry arose kong and Canton. that the foreigners were aiming at the destruction of the Faith, and after mouths of spasmodic struggles Abl-el-Kader put himself openly at the head of the "Holy War" in the Province of Oran. But he inflicted no real loss on Abc. el-Kader, whose light-armed troopers seemed to be everywhere to strike, and yet themselves to evade every blow. Clausel was succeeded in the command by a much greater soldier, Marshal Bugeaud, who was soon compelled to admit the futility of the French tratics. A new trenty was concluded in May, 1837, by which the Emir neknowledged formally the suzerainty of France, Dut was, en resument, recognized as ruler of all Western Algeria, except half a dozon pities and the fruitful plain of the Metidja.

For more than two years, there was peace between the French and Abd-el-Kader. The former were engaged in the conquest of Conetatine; the latter in the augmentation and consolidation of his military force. War broke out again in October, 1839, and Abd-cl-Kader swept upon the French power with a ferocious resolution and resistless energy paralleled only by Hyder Ali's famous descent upon the Carnatic, or the revolt of the Sepoy Army in Bengal. The whole fabrio of French anchority was shattered in an hour, and the European population found no safety, no centre of strength, save in the warled cities and the intrenched camps. The valour of the European troops was signally displayed; but the Arabs were not driven back to their mountainous deserts till, in 1841, Bugeaud returned to the sent of war with full powers, large reinforcements, and a desperate purpose. Then began that terrible warfare which has won for the Algerian veterans of France a doubtful fame. An army of 100,000 men, trained in the newest school of civilized war, and around with all the resources of modern science, flang themselves on the brave but undisciplined Arabs. Scruples of mercy and tenderness were energetically cust aside, and the determination to strike terror into the rebels at whatever cost to humanity was proclaimed by Generals and eagerly accepted by Soldiers. Over the darker deeds of that Enrious struggle history would willingly throw a veil; but justice muy be done to the gallantry of Bugeaud's army and to the vigour of its commander. Abd-el-Kader fought obstinately and bravely for empire and independence, but his power was steadily beaten down. One by one his strongholds were wrested from him; his army molted, or rather was worn away, and before Bageaud bad been a twelvemonth in Algeria he had driven the Emir over the frontier into Morocco. The Moorish Sultan was jealous of the French power, and uided Abd-el-Kuder to raise another army, with which he twice invaded the Algerian territory. He was defeated, however, both by General Bedeau and the Duo d'Aumale, and, though for some years he carried on a sort of guerrilly war on the borders, his bopes rapidly sank. Bugeaud resolved to put un end to the Moorish intervention, and bis invading army decisively defeated the Sultan on the Isly in August, 1844. A treaty was the result, the terms including the expulsion of Abd-el-Kuder from Morocco. Three years later, in spite of of General Lamoriciere succeeded in hunting down the fallen chief, who surroudered on the condition that he was to be allowed to retire into exile in Egypt or Syria. The Duo d'Aumalo was Governor-General of Algeria when this capture was made. It is painful to be obliged to record that the conditions conceded by General Lamorieiere when Abd-el-Kader surrendered were broken by the French Government, for "reasons of State." PERFUMERY and TOILET REQUISITES. The Emir was removed with extraordinary precautions first to London, thence to Fort Laimague, from that to Pau, and lastly to the beautiful Castle of Amboise, on the Loire. In the last-mentioned fortress he remained till his release by the Prince Resident in 1852 Having bound himself by oath upon the Koran not to conspire against the French dominion in Africa, Abd-el-Kader was permitted to reside at Brusea in Anntolia, and since the destruction of that city by an earthquake he lived quietly at Constantinople and Damascus. He employed his influence with asoful effect in mitigating the outbreak of Mahomedan fanaticism in the _ Lobanon when the Druses burst upon their Muronite neighbours. Indeed, in his exile he showed none of the restlessness and enthusiasm which distinguished his early career, and that tf 1071 Hongkong, Shanghai, Cologne (Germany.) ENGLISH AND CHINESE DICTIONARY WITH THE PUNTI AND MANDARIN PRONUNCIATION. An Anglo-Chinese Dictionant, published at the Daily Press Office, Hongkong.

HOR comprehensiveness and practical service this Work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese have of late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous objects in machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in extenso. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming ever-cises for students of a most instructive nature. Both the Court and Punti pronunciations are given, the accents being curefully marked on the best principle hitherto attained. The typography displays the success of an attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond in the size of body, thereby effecting a vast economy of space, achieving a clearness not 11 previously attained, and dispensing with those vast margins and vacant spaces which have beretofore characterized Chinese publications.

To illustrate the vast scope of the work, the following facts are submitted for consideration. Chalmers' Vocabularly contains about 16,000 Chinese characters, and Modhurst's English and Chinese Dictionary about 100,000, while this work contains more than 50,000 English words, and upwards of 600,000 Chinese characterse Again, despite all the grammars and other elementary works as yet published, the student of this difficult language absolutely requires examples to display the various appli-cations and equivalents of lifferent words which have one general meaning. Of these examples By Dr. DEVAN, with many Additions, Correct this work contains more han five times as many as any other Dictionary hitherto pub-

For practical purposes the arrangement of the work is so complete, that a reference KRUPP'S CAST STEEL WORKS, to its pages enables a person who understanda English to communicate effectively with natives who understand nothing but Chinese. In this respect the work will be found indispensable to all Europeans residing in plains subjects fully with which very few in-deed of them are perfectly acquainted. To It comprises upwards of two thousand large

The right to these holidays had been the rule of the school from time immemorial, and the privilege was guarded by the boys with the atmost jealousy. It may, therefore, be supposed that the Ductor's announcement met with-ne sympathy whatever. The whole bearings of this importfint case were fully discussed by the boys The threatened infringement of our rights was looked upon as a most serious affair. The head boys of the school sat day after day. in deliberation on this knotty point; and to this bout I cannot look back without surprise upon the calm, judicial spirit in which the whole case was taken up and fairly argued out, before any decision was arrived at. At length the head boys gave out their final verdict; -that in threatoning to stop the holidays, because we would not break through our well-known code and turn informers upon our school-fellow, the Doctor had exceeded his power, and broken through the longestablished rights of the school; and, although we deprecated the net which had been done, we would not give up the delinquent. A statement to this effect was written out upon a round piece of paper; and left, neatly folded and directed to the Doctor, on the table at which he usually sat. This document was received on Tuesday morning. And as it was usual for him, on the breaking-up of the school on each Tuesday evening, to announce whether the following day was to be a half or whole holiday, according us we might be entitled to either, the announcement of that evening was looked forward to-I suspect by both parties, but certainly on our side-with the utmost anxiety. At four o'clock in the afternoon, the bell rung as usual, and the boys all stood up, preparatory to dismissal for the evening. The Doctor then announced. in a grave voice-"Boys, there will be no holiday to-mor-

was a tyrant and oppressor, who delighted in harrassing us by every act of injustice in his power. Look at what he now wants to do; to stop our holidays, one of the most ancient rights of the school! Ifor one will never submit to it. . Let us rise up against it, and carry the war into his own quarters; and you may depend on it we will put him down." Irritated as we were at the moment by our supposed wrongs, these sentiments were loudly cheered, and an aggressive course was determined on. It happened, at this time, that one of the ushers had rendered himself very unpopular amongst the boys. He had "reported" this young scoundrel on more than one occasion, and the boy had been flogged in consequence-a punishment, which he righly deserved. That the usher should report him if he detected him in improper conduct was considered all fair and right amongst the boys. It was his acknowledged duty to do so; and no ill will was ever entertained towards him for performing it. Not so, however, with this worthy, who had now become our hero. And possessing, as he did, the peculiar art of hatred, whilst we fancied we were performing a public duty, he soon turned the current of popular indignation against the unfortunate assistant. In accordance with this tone of feeling; the assistant was denounced as an enemy to the rights of the school; and it
